

Follow @MacSrcs

Catalyst Impact Case for iPhone X REVIEW a refinement in performance and style!

by Jon Walters | Nov 28, 2017 | Accessory, Cases, Featured, iPhone X, Products | 2 comments

275
SHARES

Share on Facebook

Share on Twitter

Share on Pinterest

The Catalyst Impact Case is “designed to be your iPhone’s best friend for everyday urban adventures.”

Whenever a new iPhone is released, the feeling is a little bittersweet. I am truly excited to see the new tech, the latest features and to experience the bells and whistles that Apple brings to light. However, a small piece of me frets about finding a new case for the expensive device. How do you pick amongst the multitude of cases? For me, I like to go with a name that I trust, one that I have tested and tried historically. I have been a fan of Catalyst gear for the past few years. I initially learned about their waterproof cases while attending the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in Las Vegas, Nevada. Back when the iPhone was less water resistant, a simple misstep or drop into any body of water often proved disastrous. As the iPhone technology advanced into the iPhone 7/7 plus, the devices became more water resistant. With IP67 resistance, you could expect the iPhone to survive for 30 minutes at 3 feet under water. This rating has been tested and validated multiple times, with some issues with failure of the speaker. Despite the rating, I still wanted a more secure waterproof option. I chose the Catalyst Waterproof case for the iPhone, which increased the depth protection down to 33 feet. The case was the one that protected my iPhone 7/7 plus until the day that I got my iPhone X. I was excited to see the new Impact case from Catalyst and wanted to compare it with the waterproof version.